Editor:

Your Sept. 30 editorial concerning campus skateboard regulations called for an administrative review of those regulations, which were promulgated Sept. 27. This regulation was timely, but not hastily conceived as the editorial alleges. It is the result of a recommendation developed this past summer by a committee consisting of a student representative, the director of Judicial Affairs, the chief of the University Police and Fire Department, and the administrative assistant to the director of Business Affairs.

The regulation was promulgated following discussion at the first President's Council meeting of the Fall Quarter. Hazards considered were those experienced both by skateboarders and others. The regulation as proposed was endorsed by all members of the committee with one exception to a portion of it which had to do with setting an 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. time restriction on certain areas, rather than a 24-hour 7-day a week prohibition.

You are correct in your statement that the "problem is compounded at night," which is one of the reasons for the evening ban. Some of the other reasons are: (1) the number of students enrolled in night classes, (2) the traffic to and from the library, (3) the many UU activities, (4) the traffic to and from both gymnasium facilities, (5) the around the clock use of the computer facilities, (6) the 1200 or so students who utilize the dining hall, (7) the 250 student organizations, many of which meet at night in various locations on campus, (8) the pedestrian traffic to and from athletic events, and (9) the ever-increasing number of special programs on campus.

As for the weekend ban, there is some kind of special program scheduled almost every weekend between now and the end of May. These special programs do not include most of the ASI sponsored activities, such as sports, films, and concerts.

However, your call for a review overlooks the fact that review was specifically provided for in Pres. Kennedy's announcement of the regulations. In his memo, which went to the ASI among others, he pointed out that it takes effect "with the understanding that exceptions may be made as provided in the text, and that the regulation will be subject to evaluation by any group, especially the ASI, during the 1976-77 university year."

I have been asked by the President to provide any interpretations or comment on the regulations. In this regard I welcome written suggestions from anyone, particularly groups of individuals. For example, your editorial refers to skateboarding in the residence hall area, and input from representatives of the residence hall area would be especially welcomed.

In addition to the residence hall area, which has a network of walkways, excluded from the ban are the areas around the following: Music and Theater complex, Physical Education complex, Health Center, College Avenues from Perimeter Roads to and including Campus Way, California Boulevard, and Highland Drive.

There was no intent to imply that skateboards are not dangerous around the residence halls or any of the other areas not included in the ban.

I trust you find the above clarification helpful and that individuals and groups will know that their suggestions are not only welcome but will be appreciated.

Nuclear waste: A political bomb

Pres. Ford is expected to propose several welcome though belated changes in the policies governing the US export of nuclear reactors and fuels soon. The idea is to use American leverage in a more determined way, to head off the terrible danger of the spread of nuclear weapons.

But, judging from what is already known about the pending proposals, the President couldn't resist throwing a sop to the US nuclear industry in a way that would gravely undermine the whole program.

The problem is that dozens of Third World countries, in reaction to higher oil prices and the prospect of eventual exhaustion of petroleum, are turning to nuclear power. As a by product of their operation these reactors produce plutonium, which, if extracted from the spent fuel rods, can be used either as new reactor fuel or as the stuff of which nuclear bombs are made.

According to testimony before congressional committees, some 40 countries will have several bombs-worth of plutonium by 1985. If the plutonium is separated, it could be diverted into bombs before international inspectors knew what was happening.

By long standing policy the United States prohibits its own nuclear industry from exporting reprocessing facilities. But France and West Germany have contracted to provide such technology as sweeteners for their reactor sales, and have been suspicious that American objections were based on a desire to protect the US industry dominant position in reactor exports.

Even with the best of intentions, it's obvious that the United States can't cope with the proliferation threat by itself. International cooperation is essential, and the President's prospective new program contains several elements that would contribute to that goal.

The United States would reaffirm its ban on the export of plutonium-separation or uranium-enrichment equipment and technology and strongly urge other exporting nations to do the same.

Washington would allow the sale of reactors and fuel only to countries placing all their nuclear facilities under inexhaustible resource and plutonium will ultimately be needed as reactor fuel. The demonstration plant would be used to determine whether plutonium can be extracted, handled and stored on a safe and economic basis. Other countries would be invited to participate.

The fact remains, however, that by building such a demonstration plant, the United States would be doing what it is urging other countries not to do. International window-dressing not with standing. And it would be doing it needlessly.

The use of plutonium as reactor fuel is not economic in existing reactors. This may change if fast breeder reactors become a reality in the 1990's. But the decision on whether to go ahead with fast-breeder won't be made until 1985. A delay would cost nothing and would buy time for the creation of a truly viable international safeguards system.

Critics allege that Ford's real purpose is to salve the wounded feelings of elements in the nuclear industry and the federal bureaucracy that are impatient to plunge into the era of plutonium-fueled reactors. Specifically, the proposed building of a demonstration plant is seen as an effort to bail out a private-enterprise consortium that has invested heavily in a related facility.

Those aren't good enough reasons to imperil the effectiveness of an otherwise laudable antiproliferation effort.

About The Cover

San Luis gave a presidential welcome to California Gov. Jerry Brown this weekend. The public was left with a memory of a young, entertaining, humorous and strong politician. If he accomplished his purpose, he left local democratic candidates with a few more votes next November. # Politics and popular music: a People's blend

by BETSIE LOVELAND
Daily Staff Writer

Mix warm San Luis Obispo sunshine with 1,000 happy people and good music and you've got the Straw Ballot Music Festival.

The People's Wedge, a group of concerned people dedicated to raising the political consciousness in SLO County, sponsored the concert at the Freitag Ranch Saturday afternoon.

Everyone attending the concert received a membership card for the Wedge along with a "straw ballot."

Proceeds from the concert will be used to support the candidates and issues winning in the straw ballot election.

Worries that local law enforcement agencies might break up the concert were dismissed when no problems occurred.

The concert was in direct opposition to a county ordinance which forbids such gatherings. One of the Wedge's founders, City Councilman Keith Gurnee has called the ordinance "frivolous."

According to Gurnee, "The county officials tend to ignore the Wedge anyway. There hasn't been any direct opposition to the concert."

The concert got underway at 11 a.m. with entertainment by local groups, followed by the Cache Valley Drifters, also a well known local group playing country rock.

Political speeches were interspersed in the entertainment.

According to stage manager Jeff Jorgensen all local candidates were invited to speak at the festival but only "four candidates felt it was worth their while to show up."

The candidates who did make it to the concert were Richard Kresja in the 5th District Supervisorial race, Kurt Kupper, running for 3rd District Supervisor, Dave Wald, a Peace and Freedom candidate for a senate seat and Orloff Miller running for Port San Luis Recreational District Commissioner.

All four candidates presented platforms favoring strong environmental controls, especially along the coastline, as well as opposing land development.

Candidates words were replaced by the jazz-rock of Fat 'N Sassy, offering contemporary hard-rock songs as well as original numbers.

The Frisco Kids ended the concert performing all original until dusk.

All in all the organizers seemed pleased with the concert.

Keith Gurnee said at the concert Saturday, "The crowd is as good as could be expected when we're competing with the Oktoberfest and Governor Brown's appearance."

Gurnee added, "But where else could you go and for one ticket price get to hear great bands on a great day, political speakers and become a member of an organization?"

It's doubtful anyone felt cheated out of their money after this festival.

Research grants will assist projects

Work in Poly Canyon resulted in six Cal Poly students winning $12,700 to continue research. Their project involved integrating an environmental control system on a fluid-supported prototype building.

Their research is being continued through a grant from the National Science Foundation.

The NSF offers a competition annually to support undergraduate student groups with interesting applied research topics. Research groups should consist of five to 12 individuals and come from a variety of academic disciplines. This year's deadline for proposals is Dec. 1, 1976, for projects to be run in the summer of 1977.

The Student-Originated Studies Program of the NSF has supported a broad range of topics including projects on natural resource utilization, pollution studies, waste disposal, urban studies, transportation, architectural or engineering practices, land use, design studies for improving the safety, efficiency, reparability and/or longevity of consumer products. Proposals for 1977 should pertain directly to the quality of human life, the conservation of scarce resources, or the social and physical well-being of the American citizenry.

A special meeting to discuss the program and opportunities for Cal Poly students will be held October 12, at 11:00 a.m. in CSc 201. Students who wishing support for group interdisciplinary research that may be used for senior projects are encouraged to attend.

The program accepts only those proposed projects for consideration that meet the following criteria:

- The approach to understanding the problem and the search for a solution are interdisciplinary.
- The problem has immediate relevance to society, and can be studied locally or regionally without extensive travel costs.
- Meaningful data concerning a science - or technology-based problem will be collected.
- The activity period is limited to 10-12 weeks of full-time participation for a group of from 5 to 12 students.
- Each project must be student-originated and student-directed. Students must select the problem, design the study, draft the proposal, and direct the course of the study.
- Faculty advice is available and identified in those subject-fields where need is likely to arise.

Gov. Brown warms co

egation from plaza pulpit

by JAMES P. SWEENEY
Daily Co-Editor

...to the mystical aura he projects, the youthful 32-year-old governor of California doesn't have all the answers, and he is the first to admit it.

...man who told Californians "they would have to make their own decisions," came to San Luis Obispo County to deliver a message in different rhetoric, Jerry Brown said in a candid, realistic political approach to the many dilemmas.

...at a press conference in the rear of the Cigar Room, Brown emerged to tell the estimated 300 who attended that he had no answer. "It is an awfully nice place to give a political speech."

...in short commentary following question-and-answer session at the political rally lacked a key characteristic: a political focus. There were no promises.

...unusually warm Saturday, with heads of state, including his father, the impeccably dressed governor refused to provide his usual solutions for the problems of the people. Instead, he asked the audience to write to appropriate members of his staff or he told the crowd just what was being done or what could be done.

At one point, after Brown had fielded numerous requests from the well-dressed political supporters for increased funding for various programs, he stated there is only so much money, "and I would like to bring all these groups to the table at the same time and let them fight it out."

Brown was in town campaigning for Democrat Harry, who is trying to unseat Republican Robert Nimmo in the 17th district of the state senate. But the conversation was mostly Brown—his ideas, his accomplishments, his goals.

During the press conference, the bachelor son of former California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Sr., provided almost as much humor and wit as he did answers. He repeatedly avoided directly answering controversial questions by meeting the queries with questions of his own or a quick, biting, sarcastic reply.

When initially asked about the possibility of a supertanker port off the local coast, Brown didn't have an answer. He admitted the issue was still at the staff level and that he wasn't thoroughly informed on the subject. His final answer was vague at best when he said:

"I think the whole question . . . has to be evaluated very carefully and I certainly want my administration to look very closely at it."

When asked about the locally poignant controversy—Prop. 13, the Farm Labor Initiative—Brown confidently announced, "I'm for it."

"I don't know whether it is a party issue or a matter of choice," said Brown, citing a split over the measure among both Republicans and Democrats in the state legislature. "I think it will give us some stability where we didn't have it before."

Later in an appearance before an estimated 300 people in Mission Plaza, Brown denied the proposition was a "blank check" for the Agricultural Labor Relations Board. He Mellowed by the warm fall sunshine and a festive Oktoberfest atmosphere, a predominantly democratic crowd, sporting partisan campaign buttons and signs, greeted Gov. Jerry Brown's appearance in the Mission plaza Saturday afternoon with enthusiastic applause.

While some people had come for the Oktoberfest celebration, others had come primarily to see the governor.

"I came by accident," said Bob Klem of San Luis Obispo. "I'll probably stay (to see the governor). It depends on the kids." Klem's children were playing in San Luis Creek and were too preoccupied to reveal their motives for being present.

Brown did not have a prepared speech, but he established a warm rapport with the attentive gathering and fielded questions with ease and polish of a professional politician.

In addition to state and national problems, Brown responded to questions about local problems, such as the supertanker issue.

"I thought he was very effective," said Herb Lentz, of San Luis. "He related to the young people. He is a breath of fresh air in politics."

Brown passes through Oktoberfest on the political torture trail

BY ELENA-MARIE KOSTER
Daily Associate Editor

The whole affair brought to mind the mob scene in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar...remember from the required reading list in high school?

But instead of yelling "Live, Brutus!" the crowd of citizens and students of the local area called out questions that concerned the community.

And Gov. Jerry Brown didn't tell us he'd come to bury anyone, instead he came to praise Phil Harry—candidate for the 17th state senate seat—and other democratic candidates in a press conference, reception and public speech in the Mission Plaza on Saturday afternoon.

The political rally fell right in the middle of the city's Oktoberfest. The plaza had long been filled with people milling through booths and cooling themselves by drinking beer when the governor arrived at the Cigar Factory for a press conference at 3 p.m.

It is hard to believe that the governor's impression of San Luis Obispo could be more than a blur.

From the press conference, where he was literally cornered by reporters and photographers, he was lead outside to give a short talk at Mayor Kenneth Schwartz's reception. He spent half of his time there shaking hands in a reception line before walking to the mission steps, shaking hands all the way.

At the San Luis Creek bridge, Brown paused to listen to the country band performing on stage behind the Spindle. This was one of the few peaceful moments for the 38 year old governor in his three hour campaign stop in San Luis Obispo.

On the mission steps in the plaza, Brown was greeted by opposing demonstrations. Supporters of Proposition 14—the Farm Labor Initiative—were there with United Farm Workers' flags and banners flapping in the light breeze. Other pickets urged a no vote on Prop. 14.

Brown supported the proposition. Again Saturday

Steve White, a student, said "It was a good speech. I was impressed."

"I liked his manner," said a woman who wished to remain anonymous. "He relates to the people, he doesn't talk over their heads."

Rev. Walter Base termed the speech "marvelous. He handled it very well and understood the audience."

Lisa Freeman, a student, thought "he could have answered more questions."

"I was very disappointed," said Anna Giannini, an Ag Management Major at Cal Poly. "He never directly answered the questions, he talked around them. He told the audience just what they wanted to hear, and they ate up everything he said without thinking about what he really said. His speech was a slur of generalities."

In general, Brown received a positive reaction from those interviewed. Laura Miller, 7, and Becky Sorensen, 7, paused in the creek to give their reactions:

I think he is nice," said Becky.

"We both voted for him," said Laura. "In class."

"I think he is a right-on guy," said school teacher Richard Welch. "He tells the truth. He's not afraid of the truth and he's aware of our limited resources. I like Jerry."

he reinforced that stand and took the time to explain his reasons to the attentive audience.

Brown attracted one of the largest crowds in recent San Luis history. The shoulder to shoulder crowd pressed in on all sides of him. Only a few people could see Brown above the crowd, but all could hear.

Local authorities estimated the crowd at 800 people. Lt. Larry Lunsford of the San Luis Obispo police department said there were no incidents before, during or after Brown's speech. He added that none had been expected.

Brown spoke casually, without the benefit of notes. His speech pattern was off the cuff, friendly and humorous.

On the mission steps with him were the democratic candidates running for local partisan offices. Overhead one of the opposing Republican candidates advertised to the crowd by way of airplane banner dragging.

Casualty and comfortably, Brown joined into the spirit of the community by becoming a momentary auctioneer on behalf of public radio KCBX., the sponsors of the day-long event.

He announced that political speaking wasn't half as much fun as auctioneering and sold a book, a painting and attempted to sell fellow party member Harry's tie.

When the crowd showed more interest in buying his tie Brown said, "I'd better get off this platform while I've still got my clothes on," and retreated to wait for his car.

The campaigning slowed and for a moment the governor stood silently. The strength and energy used up in the day of campaigning were noticeable in his youthful face. He seemed for the first time to be aware of the intensity of the events and the crowd.

Then he and Phil Harry slipped into the car and rode off towards the San Luis Obispo airport. Next stop for the governor was that evening, farther down the coast. Et tu?

Brown speaks to the masses

Later in an appearance before an estimated 800 people in Mission Plaza, Brown denied the proposition was a "blank check" for the Agricultural Labor Relations Board. He claimed the proposal instead would allow the legislature to determine funding for the ALRB.

Brown also reiterated the same answers to the question he has become accustomed to—why did he run for President?

"I was trying to win—most of the places I went I did. I just ran out of primaries." He added he thought he brought "youth and alternative ideas," to the Democratic party through the impact of his short-lived presidential campaign.

In a rare semblance of typical politics, Brown assured there would be no further tax increases and added, "We didn't raise taxes which was the first time it happened to an incoming governor."

When asked by a reporter if he would like to comment on the Jimmy Carter

"Whether you're a Republican or a Democrat, a certain amount of valuable time is spent on rhetoric and paperwork aimed at partisan objectives," Brown said.

He blankly stated he would not accept a post in a possible Carter ad-

'I was trying to win--most places I went I did.'

Playboy controversy, Brown smiled and replied, "No, would you?"

Throughout the day, he continually hammered on the importance of separating partisan differences from the legislative process.

ministration and repeatedly refused to be pinned down on whether or not he would seek the presidency in 1976. "I don't even know if I will run for governor in '76. I may just go back to the monastery and meditate on what it all means."

Mistakes leave Mustangs tied

by CRAIG REEM
Daily Sports Editor
The score should have been 21-14. It could have been 35-14, but Cal Poly suffered its second straight week of football mistakes and survived a 14-14 tie with Boise State Saturday in Mustang Stadium. The Mustangs opening series was typical of the kind of night you don't like to go home and tell your roommates about. Cal Poly opened its initial series with Rocky Chapman, starting running back, gaining four yards. Bob Ansari, who completed eight of 16 passes for 153 yards and one touchdown, threw his first aerial to leading receiver Rick Beatty. The pass gained six yards. Personal foul and pass interference calls against the Broncos helped move the ball downfield. Fullback Jeff Jones carried three times in the drive for 17 yards as the Mustangs opened up Boise State's defensive line. Then a play that would be indicative of the fog-shrouded game occurred. With a third and one on the Bronco 10-yard line, Chapman fumbled away the ball. On the Mustangs next possession, Cal Poly started exerting its superior physical prowess on the Broncos. First, offensive end Dana Nafziger crushed Boise State Kirk Strawser on a crackback block. Then the rest of the team opened holes for Jones and protected Ansari on successful pass plays as they drove the ball to the one-yard line. With fourth down Ansari threw a quick pass to Jim Pedrick. But it was incomplete. Cal Poly, at this point, had two fine drives to their credit and no score. In the second quarter, the Mustangs were called for holding on a Bronco punt. This nullified a change of possession on the play and gave Boise State a first down on the Cal Poly 34. Four plays later the Broncos punched it in for the score. With 12:11 left in the half, Boise State led, 7-0. Nothing went right. A 31-yard punt return by Cal Poly's Steve Speer gave the Mustangs excellent field position again. And again the Mustangs drove downfield. And again, Poly lost possession as Chapman fumbled it away on the three yard line. On Cal Poly's next possession, Ansari threw a perfect bomb to Jimmy Childs for a 38-yard TD. At halftime, the score stood 7-7. The third quarter opened with a Cal Poly TD. Defensive back Rick Haycock intercepted Bronco quarterback Dee Fickett's first pass and ran in for a score. But the Mustangs

Harriers finish sixth at Cal-Aggie tourney

Cal Poly's cross country team finished sixth for the second straight weekend at the Cal-Aggie Invitational Saturday.

Running a five-mile race at UC Davis, the Mustangs placed their top three runners in the first 23 finishers. All-American Anthony Reynoso finished 18th (24:50) followed by Jim Warrick (17th at 25:06) and Luis Arreola (23rd at 25:26).

Coach Steve Miller said yesterday, "I was very pleased in terms of the times we ran. Right now we have four people running well.

Miller said that the team has still to reach its full potential.

"We've had only 12 practices together and three meets.

"We made some real positive moves forward as a team," Miller added. "I think we have solidified our top three and four spots. When we get the kind of assistance from our five, six and seven men that I expect, we will be a very tough team to beat."

Miller's worry was in the disparity — the time spacing — between the first and seventh finishers for Cal Poly. The Mustangs seventh man finished 2:20 behind Reynoso.

Fresno State placed first overall, followed by Cal, Stanford, Humbolt State, UC Davis and Cal Poly.

This weekend the Mustangs travel to Palo Alto to compete in the Stanford Invitational.

"The meet will afford us the chance to make some valuable comparisons as to our rate of improvement," Miller said.

Mustangs left fit to be tied

engineered yet another way to prevent a win when they drew a clipping penalty on a 76-yard TD punt return by Steve Spear.

It was that kind of night.

Boise State came back to tie the score, 14-14 in the fourth quarter. All that was left were some hopes and a grand, if not frustrating finish.

Cal Poly's last gasp for victory began at a familiar spot. The ball was resting on the Mustang two-yard line, a tribute to Bronco punter Vic Arias. He consistently left the Mustangs inside their own 10 yard line with masterful punts.

Ansari quickly threw Cal Poly out of its end zone with a 40 yard completion to Jimmy Childs. Mustang fans, sensing a victory, nearly stomped the stadium into a quick renovation project.

But Ansari, after narrowly missing Childs in the end zone, threw into the fog and was intercepted.

Coach Harper remarked after the game, "The tie was a loss as far as we're concerned. We had every opportunity to do it (win)." Harper blamed the Mustangs lack of execution for the tie.

"We played very well on defense," Harper said. "But they got 14 points and that isn't good enough."

Harper said the offense did well in the middle of the field but not when it was close to a score.

As Harper attested, the 7,000 fans got their money's worth. But for only a tie.

New Zealand opportunities

Qualified agriculture majors have the opportunity to spend a year in New Zealand. Cal Poly ag majors, along with the ag majors from other California universities have been selected to study there in various fields of the major. The program is sponsored by the International Programs Office.

The program begins in February and runs through October. Applications are available in Room 317 of the Administration Building and must be returned by Oct. 18.
